And more consolidation

The trend for consolidation within the legal IT space continues with two further acquisitions (both in the ebilling space) announced over the past month.

Hot on the heels of the acquisition of eBillingHub by Thomson Reuters Elite, TyMetrix (part of Wolters Kluwer Corporate Legal Services) has acquired the software assets of RORA Client Services. RORA is probably best known in this sector for its LEDESense software suite which helps law firms translate unformatted electronic invoices into the different LEDES (Legal Electronic Data Exchange Standards) formats accepted by the many legal ebilling systems now in use around the world.

Next, Mitratech, one of the biggest players in the corporate legal systems market (including matter management, ebilling and GRC/governance/risk/compliance) has been acquired by Vista Equity Partners, the same PE/VC group that owns Aderant. As part of the acquisition, the company’s president & CEO Afshin Behnia has stood down and been replaced by Eric Thurston, most recently a senior VP with another Vista Equity company.

Litéra wins ToA patent

Litéra has been assigned a US patent for the table of authorities compilation technology that lies behind its recently acquired CitationWare offering, a legal market-centric add-in for Microsoft Word.

Hubbard One move into case outcomes

Hubbard One has dramatically extended the scope of its Monitor Suite with the launch of its Case Outcomes module which aims to provide law firms with a competitive advantage gleaned from an analysis of court documents. Explaining the product, Hubbard One president Mark Schiff said “For years, the information available within court documents has been hard to access and even harder to aggregate and interpret, so this rich source of intelligence was almost universally overlooked.” The system provides firms with data to identify litigation trends, including benchmarking their own efficiency, effectiveness and differentiation, as well as better understanding their opposing counsel.

November’s wins & deals

IntApp is continuing its winning streak with yet more deals announced this month including Corrs Chambers Westgarth in Australia, who are buying the entire IntApp product portfolio of Wall Builder, Time Builder and Integration Builder; and Kentucky/Ohio law firm Greenebaum Doll & McDonald PLLC, who have deployed Time Builder.

Denver-based Long+Page LLP has selected Summation CaseVantage from AccessData as its inhouse, web-based litigation review platform.

Trademark specialist Young & Thompson has implemented the Electronic File Room (EFR) trademark module from IP document management systems developer First To File. The firm is already running the EFR patent module.

New York law firm Ganfer & Shore LLP is upgrading its practice management system to Aderant RainMaker Platinum. Last month Aderant announced it had acquired Rainmaker Software.

The City of New York has begun a pilot program to archive all its social media content via the Nextpoint Inc Cloud Preservation service. The Nextpoint service will automatically and iteratively archive NYC’s 100+ social media feeds from 40 different agencies on a wide array of platforms including Twitter, Facebook, LinkedIn and YouTube.

Another busy month for Intelliteach with new orders for the company’s outsourced helpdesk services coming in from 550-user Burr & Forman LLP and 400-user Stradley Ronon Stevens & Young LLP. Stradley Ronon will use Intelliteach for primarily after-hours support, while Burr & Forman has outsourced its entire service desk operations.

- Intelliteach has become a sponsor of Pro Bono Net. As part of the deal, it will provide 24/7 support for the Pro Bono Manager hosted system that helps law firms manage their pro bono programs.

  Document exchange specialist Biscom, which provides a secure alternative to FTP and email, has won five more law firm clients: Caplin & Drysdale, Germer Gertz, Porter Scott, Graves Dougherty Hearon & Moody and Wiley Rein LLP.

  Chattanooga-based Chambliss Bahner & Stophel has successfully reorganised its FAST (Firm Administrative Support Team) system by the adoption of Bighand digital dictation technology, achieving improvements in both document turnaround times and attorney-to-support staff ratios.

  UK-based Linex Systems has won its first major US deal, from Arnold & Porter, for its technology which allows law firm library and information management services to combine all their external information streams and create custom alerts for lawyers and other end users.

Inhouse legal the next big challenge?

One aspect of the so-called ‘New Normal’ in the legal market that tends to be overlooked is the way the offices of general counsel and inhouse legal departments are using technology to manage their relationships with their law firm panels.

Traditionally inhouse legal has been the poor relation of the enterprise IT infrastructure, with managers having to explain to their IT teams why they require all these weird and wonderful document and file management systems from funny little vendors nobody has ever heard of in the broader computer industry. But, with the mantra of ‘shareholder value’ now even permeating into inhouse legal departments, corporate counsel are starting to demand better tools with which to not only manage their relationships with law firms but also to measure and benchmark their performance against their peers.

Faced with these challenges, the vendor community is stepping up to the mark with more feature rich products (such as last year’s launch of Passport by Datacert) plus the trend for consolidation. Last year Thomson Reuters bought Serengeti, this month TyMetrix has bought RORA and Vista Equity Partners has acquired Mitratech.

In fact just about the only people to not spot this trend are the law firms who still seem determined to hang onto hourly billing and avoid alternative fee arrangements (AFAs). Or else ignore their client’s ebilling requirements and are then puzzled why their bills are not being paid. And then there is their fascination with proprietary extranets and portals, which overlook the fact inhouse legal teams may be dealing with dozens of different firms that each run their own proprietary platforms.
DMS - and now for something different

There is no let-up in the momentum being gathered by ‘alternative’ document management system providers – alternative as in someone other than OpenText or Autonomy iManage.

EponaUSA, the North American subsidiary of the Rotterdam (Holland)-based legal systems developer Epona, has just won an order for its DMSforLegal, Microsoft Sharepoint-based document management system, from Burr & Forman LLP, a 500-user firm that has offices across the Southeast. EponaUSA describe their system as “the first out-of-the-box Sharepoint DMS designed for lawyers.” DMSforLegal will run on Sharepoint 2010 plus Microsoft Office 2007 or 2010 platforms.

Meanwhile Elite (which a decade ago in December 2001 was the first major legal vendor to experiment with Sharepoint as a DMS) has added World Software, the developers of the Worldox DMS, to its alliance partner program. The collaboration means Elite Connector for Worldox users can automatically synchronize new client/matters and attorney assignments on Elite’s practice and financial management platforms.

• Elite has also announced a broadening of its partnership with nQueue Billback to provide closer integration between Elite 3E and Enterprise software and nQueue’s cost recovery systems.
