More consolidation, now BT to buy Tikit

The consolidation trend in the legal IT industry continues with British Telecommunications plc making a £64.2 million cash offer for the AIM-listed Tikit Group earlier this month. The offer takes the form of a court-sanctioned scheme of arrangement under part 26 of the Companies Act and, assuming no last minute hitches, will be effective by 18 January 2013.

So what happens then? We spoke to David Hobday of the BT Enterprises division, which will be Tikit’s new home from next year, and he explained that the division is currently a group of six discrete businesses, each with their own CEOs, that are effectively left to run their own destinies. Hobday said BT’s policy is to “foster and nurture” companies like Tikit but “the secret is to allow them to retain their entrepreneurial spirit.”

Tikit director Simon Hill said the deal was good news for Tikit as a company, as it combined the best of enterprise culture with the benefits of being part of the larger BT group. He added that it was also well-timed good news for Tikit’s law firm customers, many of which are still uncomfortable with the concepts of cloud, managed services and support for flexible working/BYOD because of concerns about the viability of the cloud services providers within the legal marketspace.

With BT offering a scale of security and robustness in its cloud hosting and server infrastructure that already meets the approval of HMG and the MoD, Hill said, “Tikit can offer a bridge into this world, delivering a greater degree of certainty” than has previously been available from other vendors in the UK legal market.

The Insider - next month everything changes

This is the last issue of the Legal Technology Insider newsletter in its present format. Next month we will be back with a brand new look plus extended news coverage to reflect the growing globalisation of both law firms and the legal IT industry. A world where a decision taken in London or Leeds can have immediate and lasting repercussions for companies and law firms in New York, Frankfurt, Hong Kong and Sydney.

We will continue to carry all your favourite features and sections – including Dilbert. And we will now be publishing 12 issues a year in digital formats (both PDF and Apple iPad editions) as well as continuing to print our original hard copy version, still on our hallmark orange paper of course! More details next month.
iManage to “reform the band”

It sounds like something off MTV’s Bands Reunited but the iManage DMS team (now part of HP) is bringing back the people who made the product such a success in the years pre-Autonomy. Geoff Hornsby, the regional sales director, is already there – in fact he never left! Dan Carmel has already rejoined the company and the latest recruit is Matthew Cleverdon, who returns to the business after a spell as IT director of West Midlands law firm Wright Hassall.

On the new business front, new wins include Trethowans and IP specialists D Young & Co via Phoenix, Birketts in East Anglia and Dillon Eustace in Ireland via Tikit, the Asda legal team via Huron plus accountancy firms Price Bailey and Kingston Smith. Following its recent round of mergers, Norton Rose has now consolidated worldwide on an iManage DMS platform.

Turning to the future, iManage reports a lot of interest in its new iPad solution, which includes integration for security and MDM (mobile device management) with Good Technology, and says it will soon be announcing its first hosted document management system win with a UK law firm. + See back page

Oyez survey reveals gaps in law firm security

Oyez Professional Services has published the results of a recent survey into the security policies of High Street law firms. The results are distinctly worrying, as they suggest many firms have still to come to terms with the new regulatory environment and risk not complying with rules intended to protect personal data.

• 53% of law firms do not give responsibility for security to the firm’s COLP, despite this being the person the SRA will hold responsible.
• 30% of firms are unaware of SRA regulations.
• 40% of firms believe it is likely or inevitable they will breach information security regulations.
• 60% of law firms have already suffered an information security breach, such as a lost or stolen laptop or file.
• 73% of firms believe employee error is the most likely source of an information security breach.
• 70% of law firms have done either no employee security training at all or none within the last 12 months.
• 50% of firms have no data encryption policy.

The full results of the survey plus information about Oyez’s own information security management system can be found on the web: www.oyezforms.co.uk/security.asp

Quindell to raise £26.5m

AIM-listed Quindell Portfolio plc, best known in the legal sector as the owners of the law firms Silverbeck Rymer and Pinto Potts, has entered into a placement agreement with Cenkos Securities to raise £26.5 million through a share placing.
Workshare acquires enterprise social network vendor IdeaPlane

Hot on the heels of the SkyDox merger, Workshare today (Wednesday 28 November) acquired IdeaPlane, an enterprise social network built specifically for highly regulated industries. The deal will provide Workshare customers with a complete collaboration and communication solution by integrating IdeaPlane’s easy-to-use, secure and compliant social networking features into Workshare’s collaboration platform.

According to a recent McKinsey report, adopting social technologies offers companies the potential to improve productivity of highly skilled workers by 20-25% and save billions of pounds from time lost on inefficient communications and information searches. The acquisition enables Workshare to extend this benefit to its customer base and further differentiate its platform.

Built in partnership with one of the world’s largest investment banks and launched earlier this year, IdeaPlane’s customisable social networking platform can be rapidly and securely deployed across regulated organisations. Workshare say IdeaPlane will enhance the Workshare platform with robust social networking features, including status updates; the promotion of important events, news and content; email notifications and the creation of open, closed and secret groups. Enterprise administration features allow companies to comprehensively manage and moderate the network.

“IdeaPlane’s integration into the Workshare product portfolio allows us to meet our customer requirements for ultra-secure social networks that maintain the integrity of data and IP security mandates set by an organisation,” said Workshare CEO Anthony Foy. “Our combined platform will allow organisations to monitor, manage and closely control the social network being used within their organisations while facilitating collaboration and the exchange of information and ideas.”

Who’s in & who’s out: November’s wins, deals swapouts & rollouts

Rilance Software is continuing to sweep aside all competition in the COLP & COFA compliance software market by clocking up a further 83 law firm wins in the past four weeks. For space reasons we are not listing them here however it is worth noting this must be the only UK legal software vendor to ever go from zero to 300 customers in the space of 10 months.

Clifford Chance is to rollout the Expert Time Management system from Aderant to 3400 fee earners in the firm’s global network of 34 offices in 24 countries. Clifford Chance CIO Paul Greenwood said the firm evaluated several options before selecting Aderant Expert Time, adding “there are tools to suit all users however they prefer to capture their time, whether through desktop tools, mobile apps or found time.”

PGS Law, part of the Quality Solicitors network, has contracted with Linetime for the supplier’s Liberate case and matter management software. The firm will also use Linetime software for practice management.

The Claims Guys, an Altrincham-based claims management business that focuses primarily on PPI mis-selling and credit card charges, has selected Infinity CCS to deliver an automated quality assurance system that will enhance its compliance framework. The Claims Guys are regulated by the Ministry of Justice.

Peppermint Technology has secured a five year contract with Ombudsman Services to provide an ADR (alternative dispute resolution) handling system via the Peppermint Platform. Last year Ombudsman Services resolved over 18,000 complaints and handled over 200,000 queries via post (38%) and phone (62%). By deploying Peppermint, the company will move to a 365 days a year online service.

Irwin Mitchell has used SQS Software to introduce automated regression testing into its systems development programmes. The firm is currently running SQS to test its case management systems. There is a full case study on Irwin Mitchell and SQS here…

Eclipse Legal Systems has completed the rollout of its A2A Release 2 integration for users of the MoJ RTA claims portal. Since Release 2 went live in late September, Eclipse has rolled out the system to over 250 law firms (251 at the time of writing) leading Eclipse to claim it is the market leader in this sector by a substantial margin.

Pannone LLP report that since implementing the Thomson Reuter Elite LawSoft software just under a year ago, the system (which is primarily used in the firm’s Court of Protection department) is now helping the firm manage over £230 million on behalf of its COP clients.
More wins & deals

Quiss Technology has been engaged by Mundays LLP to provide a fully managed outsourced IT solution. The deal will see Quiss replace the firm’s incumbent supplier Datashare which had been providing the firm with outsourced services since late 2009. Managing partner Valerie Toon said the firm felt it had outgrown its original supplier, adding that the Quiss pricing model of a fixed monthly fee “that included absolutely everything, including unlimited helpdesk support, training and consultancy” meant “because we have no hidden extras to worry about, we have complete confidence in our IT and can develop a strategy that includes IT as a driver for growth, not a stumbling block.”

Herfordshire-based web development specialist Tier 2 Consulting has developed a new web application – called SimplifytheLaw – for London-based legal services provider Evident Legal. The application combines the Alfresco content management system with Exari document assembly to provide SMEs with free guidance on legal issues and the ability to draft their own legal documents online.

Ward Hadaway is the latest law firm to implement the Egress Switch email and data encryption service from Egress Software Technologies. (We understand Egress has also won a firmwide licence deal with another top 100 firm but we’re not allowed to mention that yet.) The firm’s head of IT Greg Taylor said “The tipping point came when three of our major clients came to us with their own email encryption products they wanted us to start using. Imagine if 100 or more clients came to us with similar requests.”

DocsCorp reports four more firms have chosen pdfDocs: English firms Gregg Latchams LLP and Osborne Morris & Morgan Solicitors, William Fry in Ireland and Sijbrandij De Waard Advocaten in the Netherlands. In Italy Pavesio E Associati is swapping out Workshare in favour of compareDocs, whilst Austmann & Partners in Germany is also going with compareDocs.
Altlaw go east to Poland

London-based litigation support services company Altlaw Limited has teamed up with Capita plc, one of the UK’s leading providers of business process outsourcing, to create a new legal document review service. The venture will be based in a new £10 million review centre in Kraków, Poland, and will offer customers a pan-European delivery capability. The centre currently houses 135 legally qualified reviewers but has the capacity to accommodate up to 550.

Total trumps Lord Sugar

The High Court has dismissed an appeal by YouView TV (a digital TV set-top box services company chaired by Lord Alan Sugar) over a Trade Marks Registry finding that the name youview is “confusingly similar” to an earlier trademark YourView registered in 2009 by Cheltenham-based telecoms specialist Total Ltd. Total, has now issued High Court proceedings against YouView TV for trade mark infringement and is seeking damages plus an injunction.

Milestones in the cloud

Ochresoft has chalked up two milestones for its Intelliworks cloud-based case management platform. In the 12 months to October 2012, conveyancing and probate users exceeded 50,000 case inceptions, an 11% increase on the previous year, with October seeing the highest number of monthly inceptions (over 5000) to-date.
New product launches

There are a raft of new products launches and upgrades this month, starting with Litéra which has announced the general availability of its new Secure File Transfer system. This offers email encryption, electronic signatures and secure large file transfer and is available as a hosted or on-premise private cloud application. Users can send files up to 2Gb directly from Microsoft Outlook or up to 100Gb using the web interface. Given Litéra’s strong position in the legal IT market, this new product could hit specialist vendors like Egress.

Eclipse Legal Systems has announced details of its upcoming mobile time recording application. Codenamed MyTime, it is designed for Eclipse’s Proclaim case and practice management system users, and will cater for all popular devices including Apple iOS, Android, Blackberry and Windows Mobile. Real-time (or on-demand/push) sync means recorded time elements can be posted to the relevant Proclaim area for analysis and confirmation. MyTime will also include a client and matter lookup feature.

TikitTFB was talking about the roadmap for its Partner for Windows system at its national user conference last week. New features coming over the next 12 months include an Android version of the Carpe Diem time recording system, new compliance functionality (including COLP & COFA), support for the latest version of the MoJ RTA portal and the Jackson civil justice reforms, plus a workflow-enabled version of the Tikit TMS template management system for smaller firms. All these enhancements are covered by the TikitTFB maintenance and support contract.

SearchFlow has launched Portfolio Monitor, a bespoke service for organisations needing to manage large property portfolios. Instead of ordering and processing conveyancing searches themselves, they can outsource the work to a dedicated team at SearchFlow. Users can track the status of searches across multiple properties via an online dashboard, there is a complete audit trail and all data is archived for 15 years.

At last, ediscovery gains some traction in Europe!

It used to be the ‘American disease’ because whenever you attended US legal IT shows at least 60% of the exhibitors and 75% of the panel sessions were discussing ediscovery systems. Ironically, just as the US ediscovery market is flatlining, over in the UK and Europe it is starting to take off.

Interestingly, the impetus in EMEA is coming from general counsel using systems inhouse to handle primarily regulatory investigative work (including freedom of information requests) because it is perceived as cheaper than outsourcing document review work to the big consultancies like E&Y and Deloittes.

Another, incidental, consequence is that the EDD vendors who understand the UK and Europe’s more collaborative approach to edisclosure are gaining the most traction, at the expense of vendors wedded to the more confrontational, hard-ball US approach to ediscovery. It is a bit early to start making New Year predictions but we think ediscovery will be one of the growth areas in the UK/EMEA legal IT sector in 2013.

In other ediscovery news... the European Commission’s Directorate General for Competition has selected Nuix technology for its inspections at corporate premises. The EU Directorate selected Nuix for its ability to provide in-depth investigations of terabytes of unstructured data within hours of set-up and using a small hardware footprint.

In anticipation of the April 2013 Jackson civil justice procedural reforms, First Advantage Litigation Consulting has expanded its London document review centre at 4 St Paul’s Churchyard to accommodate 75 reviewers. First Advantage also has offices in Frankfurt, Zurich and Brussels.

Fresh investor at Aderant

Madison Dearborn Partners announced this week that it is making an equity investment in Aderant Holdings. Existing investors Vista Equity Partners and the Aderant management team, led by CEO Chris Giglio, will retain ownership positions, with Madison Dearborn acquiring approximately half of the Vista and Aderant management stakes in the business. Additional terms were not disclosed. The transaction, subject to regulatory approvals, is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

OpenText get cheeky

Hats off to OpenText for launching a cheeky deal offering Autonomy users, worried about the fallout from the Mike Lynch/HP dispute, a free trade-in of their Autonomy software licences for the equivalent OpenText products. This includes switching iManage DMS to OpenText eDOCS. The trade-in offer expires on 31st December.

Vital statistic: 63%

According to Knut-Magnar Aanestad, the CKO of the Norwegian law firm Schjødt speaking at the recent VQ Forum event in Sweden, as a result customising HP iManage DMS to create a bespoke knowledge management system, the firm has increased its profit margin from 50% to 63%.

10 years ago today . . .

The big story in November 2002 was that ACE, the one-time barristers’ legal software market leader, had been acquired by rival Meridian Law. By then Meridian was part of Mountain Software, which would itself become part of the IRIS Legal empire. On a lighter note, there was debate over which TLA (three letter acronym) best described the then still novel digital dictation workflow technology. The funniest suggestion, courtesy of a female IT director, was EMU = Even Men can Use it.
